TRIBUTE TO HER MAJESTY QUEEN ELIZABETH II

The Cremation Society of Great Britain joins the nation in mourning the death of Her Majesty The Queen. Our thoughts and condolences are with the Royal Family. Throughout her unprecedented 70 years on the throne the Queen served the nation as an example of British values of honour, dignity and resilience. She dedicated her life to the people of the United Kingdom and the Commonwealth, providing compassionate and inspirational leadership during the many challenging times of her long reign and was a hugely influential and respected figure across the globe.

Lord Rupert de Mauley – Honorary President of The Cremation Society

A new £2.6m crematorium is set to open in Northumberland next month. The purpose-built crematorium and chapel is being built at Northumbrian Woodland Burials, near Felton, and is scheduled to open on October 14. Blyth has the only crematorium in the county at the moment, so owners Scott and Laura Clarehugh are confident it will be welcomed. The business has offered only coffin burials since it was established by Scott's father, Steve, in 2002. When he passed away in 2015, the business was taken over by Scott and Laura who realised that demand for burials was falling. The crematorium has no catafalque or curtains, but instead a restored coffin bier which will be illuminated during the service, with the dimming of the lights marking the end of the service instead. Underfloor heating using an innovative heat exchanger captures the waste heat produced by the cremator. A filter which significantly reduces the amount of harmful nitrogen oxides released from the types of coffin used during the cremation process has also been installed at a cost of £30,000. Five new full-time jobs have also been created at the renamed Northumberland Woodland Burial & Crematorium. To read more on this story please visit: Northumberland Gazette

The wait for a decision on whether plans a crematorium can be built near Caersws could go on for another couple of months. A Welsh Government spokesman has said that November 1 is the deadline for a ministerial decision on the application. On July 5 a planning hearing took place into planning hearing took place which heard arguments for and against plans by Powys Crematorium Limited to build an all-new crematorium at a site north of the B4568 road on land "formally known" as Ael Y Bryn between Caersws and Aberhafesp. The application, which was lodged Powys County Councillor for Abermule, Cllr Gareth Pugh's firm, had been approved by the council's Planning Committee in May 2021. But it was "called in" to be decided by a government minister in August 2021.

The hearing was conducted by former director of Wales planning inspectorate, Tony Thickett who kept the parameters of the hearing to three key issues: Is there a need for a crematorium in Powys? Is it the right location? Issues of highway safety.

Atlantic View Crematorium is planned for a site off the A39 near Bude but opponents have raised concerns about traffic, impact on the landscape and on tourism. A decision is set to be made next week on whether a new crematorium can be built in North Cornwall. A planning application to build the new facility on land next to the A39 at Poundstock is set to go before Cornwall Council's strategic planning committee. The Atlantic View Crematorium Consortium is seeking permission to build the new crematorium which they have said is designed to look like an Anglo-Saxon burial mound. Planning officers have recommended that the application be approved. However, the plans have attracted a number of objections including from local Cornwall councillor Nicky Chopak and Poundstock Parish Council. There are concerns that the crematorium would affect the landscape, generate additional traffic and have an impact on tourism businesses in the area. Cornwall Council's strategic planning committee will meet on Thursday (September 15) to debate and make a decision about the application. For the full article please visit: Cornwall Live

Further to the above press release, the decision on whether to grant planning permission has been delayed for a month following the death of HM Queen Elizabeth II. The application will instead proceed to be targeted towards the next meeting of the Strategic Planning Committee on the 13th October 2022

Plans for a multi-million pound facility to create a space for locals in a Derbyshire town to say farewell to loved ones closer to home is set for approval. In March, Bolsover District Council and Shirebrook Town Council were given the go-ahead to make plans at the Shirebrook site for the £9 million project. Set to be built on land adjacent to the current Shirebrook Cemetery, official plans for the crematorium were submitted to the local planning authority at the end of June. If approved the new project would allow locals to say their final goodbyes to loved ones much closer to home. If approved, construction is expected to then begin in March 2023 and the facility would open in April 2024. For the full article please visit: Derby Telegraph

Cremators will not be installed at Poole Crematorium for the foreseeable future under current plans from the council. The proposal for the site at Gravel Hill is for the process to be undertaken to formally change from the status of the venue to ceremonial only.

Poole Crematorium has not had working cremators since April 2020. The site has still held services when open but bodies have been transported to Bournemouth Crematorium for the cremation. A petition to save Poole Crematorium has attracted thousands of signatures, but, based on a BCP Council cabinet report, these calls have fallen on deaf ears. Due to a BCP Council error in its report to members, it was originally recommended to councillors that the reinstatement of cremators at the local authority's Poole site be deferred until such time as the Bournemouth facility cremators reach end of their economic life, which is believed to be in around seven years. Portchester Crematorium to replace its cremators with new natural gas-fuelled equipment. Ageing cremators at Portchester Crematorium are set to be replaced by new natural gas equipment after cheaper and more environmentally-friendly electric machines were ruled out. Despite the aims of the local authorities that own the facility to reduce their carbon emissions, a feasibility study into the £3.5m project favours the more polluting option. '[Electric cremators are] larger than the existing and the available space can only accommodate three electrical cremators,' a report by Fareham Borough Council property manager Ian Cousins says. 'Due to the proximity of nearby properties, three is the maximum number of this type of cremators that we can provide. The report will be considered by the crematorium's controlling joint committee of councillors who will be asked to back its recommendations on Monday (September 26). Interactive tours of UK crematoria are being rolled out to help grieving families understand what happens ahead of a loved-one's funeral. New technology, already embraced by the hospitality industry, to give the most realistic virtual experience, has now been adapted by a leading funeral company. In a worldwide first, all five senses are targeted by 'immersive' show-round experiences – from seeing the layout of a chapel of rest, to hearing planned music and smelling flowers with scents made available ahead of the service. Children and first-time funeral attendees can particularly benefit from an opportunity to get such a realistic taste of how a ceremony all fits together, says Frank Meilack, Director of Community Engagement at Memoria UK. This move has been supported by Ann Chalmers, Chief Executive of Child Bereavement UK, (<https://www.childbereavementuk.org/>) a charity which supports families and trains professionals when a child grieves and when a child dies. Its groundbreaking technology allowing mourners to experience the surroundings of a cremation, has been supplied by Snowdonia-based hyybab, <https://hyybab.com/> launched last year by hyybab pioneers Leo and Paul Lloyd as they pivoted from their hospitality marketing business. As well as the hi-tech tour, mourners will also receive a pack of items to help gain insights into their intended site for a final goodbye. To read more on this story please visit: Response

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

Cyprus' first crematorium is set to begin operations by 2024, eight years after the relevant law was first passed. The environment department approved the application for the creation of the crematorium by MW Crematorium Cyprus Ltd, at an estimated cost of €2.2 million, sources told Cyprus Mail. The timeline for the project to be completed was set at 18 to 24 months. According to the environmental authority, the proposed building site in Ayia Varvara in Paphos poses no significant negative impact to the area's surroundings.

The crematorium will be a fully-fledged facility with a furnace in the basement and refrigeration facilities. There will also be a room on the ground floor with the capacity to accommodate up to 70 people where services can take place.

Despite parliament passing the long-awaited law regulating cremations in 2016, up to now there has been no movement on the creation of a facility.

The island, together with Malta remain the only EU members without a crematorium.

Calls for the option for cremation have been raised in particular among the expatriate community, both personal choice and practical grounds, noting the shortage of cemetery plots and the high cost of repatriating a body. During discussions of the bill in 2016, the Church had voiced its opposition, but said its position stemmed not from dogma but rather from the need to "preserve tradition". The Church argued that burial fulfils the needs of relatives to visit the graves of loved ones, adding that this ritual offers them solace. In contrast, the Green Party has long backed the creation of a crematorium in Cyprus. "A crematorium is necessary because it will provide an alternative to people funding cemetery land that is tied up for years. It is difficult to change century old habits, but I believe that we should make a start," Green Party leader Charalambos Theopemptou had previously said. VIP guests and industry leaders came together at Westerleigh Cemetery & Crematorium, near Bristol, to commemorate its 30th anniversary.

Representatives from the Cremation Society of Great Britain, Federation of Burial and Cremation Authorities, Institute of Cemetery and Crematorium Management, National Association of Funeral Directors, British Institute of Funeral Directors, the Society of Allied and Independent Funeral Directors plus other business partners and suppliers, helped to mark the occasion by observing the unveiling of a commemorative plaque by Site Manager, Shaun Chapman-Young.

Guests were also invited to write a message in a book which will be placed in a time capsule and buried on the site later this year, to be re-opened in 30 years' time. They also toured the site's lovingly landscaped grounds and buildings.

A special guest of honour at the 30th anniversary celebration was former Northavon District Council member Marilyn Palmer, who planted the first tree on the site to mark the beginning of the building process. Marilyn has visited the site several times since its opening in 1992, was delighted to join on this special anniversary and meet Shaun Chapman-Young and his team who care for the site and the bereaved today.
